Genres is the name given to the category, classification or group of films that have similar techniques or conventions. There are many types of genres. The primary (main) film genres are action, adventure, comedy, crime, drama, epics, horror, musicals, science fiction, war, and westerns. Genres are important because it helps the film viewers choose a movie that may interest and entertain them and it also gives them a brief idea of the storyline of the movie. For example, the story line in a romantic movie is that a guy gets his ideal girl after a conflict. Movies in a specific genre all share similar techniques and conventions. Action movies usually have continuous energy, rescues, escape plans, physical stunts, chases, fights, special effects, battles and races.
